TELLS OF WORK DONE BY COUNTY FARM BUREAU

County Agent Greenwalt and Miss Armstrong Review Activities

MUCH IS ACCOMPLISHED

PLUMSTEADVILLE, Jan. 12—Bucks county farmers and their wives attending the 17th annual meeting of the Bucks County Farm Bureau, officially known as Bucks County Agricultural Extension Association, in the grange hall, here, heard excellent reports of the year's work by County Agent William F. Greenwalt, and Miss Rhonda Armstrong, county home economics leader.

Statistics reported by Mr. Greenwalt included 345 farm visits, 1300 office calls and 810 phone calls in his line of work.

Letters and circulars sent out from the extension office totaled many thousands. Six farm tours conducted by the extension service were attended by 493 persons.

Other activities sponsored by the Farm Bureau or given active cooperation by Mr. Greenwalt are 4-H Club work, cow testing associations, tuberculin testing work, orchard improvement work, dairy improvement work, fruit growers, poultrymen, potato growers, etc.

The report of Miss Armstrong in the afternoon revealed that during the year she had spent 64 days on work covering foods and nutrition, of which 20 days were devoted to junior work and 44 days for adults. One hundred and sixteen days were spent in instruction work, 80 days being devoted to juniors and 31 days to adults. Household management and decorating consumed 44 days for juniors and 28 days for adults.

Miss Armstrong also reported very interestingly on various phases of her 4-H Club work with girls, many of whom have become skilled dressmakers, cooks or home decorators. She also exhibited various outstanding specimens of dress making which are set aside to be entered as exhibits at State Farm Products Show at Harrisburg next week.

Another astonishing report given by Miss Armstrong was on the girls' canning club work, in which she had thirty-one girls who canned a total of 1160 jars of farm products. In this group one girl alone, Katherine Reister, Bucksville, canned a total of 236 jars, while another girl in the same community canned 133 jars. A third girl in the county, only eleven years old, canned 68 jars.

Miss Armstrong also exhibited several chairs which had been repaired.

RELATIVES CLAIM TEACHER IS NOT VICTIM OF NERVES

Say They Are Sure Miss Mary Stever Was Held-Up and Robbed

POLICE TO INVESTIGATE

Will Question Victim Further Concerning Her Experience On Sunday Night

DOYLESTOWN, Jan. 12—Friends and members of the family with whom Miss Mary Stever, 35-year-old Quakertown Junior High School teacher, lived, are firmly convinced that she was held up by bandits last Sunday night, blind-folded, robbed and placed in the Tohickon Creek, and that her story was not the result of hallucinations and a nervous condition.

Miss Stever lived with Mr. and Mrs. D. Horace Diehl, at Pipersville, and she was driving out of their lane Sunday evening about 6 o'clock on her way to her boarding place in Quakertown, when she was held up at the end of the lane leading to the Doylestown and Easton highway.

The teacher was robbed of $6 and some small change. Her traveling bag was ransacked and the clothes taken out and tossed about the floor of her car. A ring that she wore was stolen from her finger. The ring was a graduation present from Allen S. Stever, an uncle, who was killed Saturday night by a hit-run driver near Weisel, and who was buried yesterday. The $6 was also a gift from her deceased uncle.

Members of Miss Stever's family in Pipersville reported today that after a rest in bed on Monday following the harassing experience of the night before, she arose Tuesday morning and ate breakfast with her foster-parents and Tuesday afternoon returned to Quakertown to her boarding place. Wednesday, Miss Stever was back with her classes in the Quakertown Junior High School where she teaches English.

"It is only fair to Miss Stever and her many friends that we make known that in our opinion and in the opinion of her friends, that Miss Stever was actually held up and robbed," Mr. Diehl said today.

"She told me Tuesday that she drove out of the lane about 6 o'clock Sunday night and at the end of the lane a bandit jumped in the car," Mr. Diehl continued. "The car was recovered the next morning near Tohickon Park. Miss Diehl's empty pocketbook was in the car. She returned to our home after midnight Sunday night after stopping first at the roadside stand of William Coulston, near our place. Her clothes were soaking wet through to the skin and she was quite exhausted and suffered somewhat from exposure.

"Miss Stever said that she was blindfolded. She was removed into another car and believes there were at least three men questioning her at that time, as to where she lived in Quakertown. They were a bit angry about the fact that she would not tell them and one of them slapped her across the face several times, but that was the only roughness used.

"Miss Stever says that she remembers being in the water but cannot tell whether she was thrown in or not. We are inclined to believe that she was carried in the Tohickon Creek by the bandits who sought to revive her when she suffered from fear of what was going on.

"The car of Miss Stever was recovered near Tohickon Park Monday morning. William Parrish, caretaker of Tohickon Park, has informed us that he saw no car at the park at 8 o'clock, two hours after Miss Stever left the Diehl home, near the park, but at 9 o'clock Sunday night, Freeman Kulp, of Ferndale, saw the car parked where it was found the next morning.

"The first bandit, the one that jumped into Miss Stever's car, placed a gun in her ribs and told her to drive on. She remembers that one of the bandits forced the ring off her finger, for it fit quite tightly. She said that she thought the bandit who jumped into her car was quite tall and that he had a dark complexion.

"We feel quite sure that Miss Stever's original story of this affair is correct and that the story that she suffered from mental distress and imagined the entire affair, is absolutely untrue."

State Police of the Doylestown substation, it was stated this morning, will conduct a further investigation. The further questioning of Miss Stever after the affair was advised against by the teacher's physician, who called at the Diehl home to administer professional aid.

COAL MUST BE WEIGHED BEFORE DELIVERY

State Enacts New Law Protecting The Consumer

MUST HAVE SLIPS

The Department of Internal Affairs at Harrisburg is busy setting up machinery under the Baldi Act to protect the public against short weight in the purchase of coal.

Numerous persons in the eastern section of the state have been victims of short weighing chiefly in the purchase of so-called "bootleg coal" mined at abandoned coal properties and trucked to other cities for sale.

Under the Baldi Act public weighmasters will be licensed and stationed at properties where coal is mined and sold.

The Baldi Act provides that each purchaser of coal must be given a slip showing the weight, quality of the product and the signature and license number of the public weighmaster.

Truckers who remove coal from their vehicles after having obtained a certified weight slip are subject to arrest for larceny.

Public weighmasters' licenses cost $5 each and are expected to net the Commonwealth $40,000.

Wilkes-Barre, Jan. 12—While their leaders declared a strike call could not be avoided, members of the United Anthracite Miners of Pennsylvania, a newly-formed insurgent union, today prepared to convene their special convention here tomorrow morning.

COUNCIL REQUESTS MORE MONEY AND MEN FOR JOB HERE

Petition CWA Officials So That Water Extension Can Be Speeded Up

WEATHER A HANDICAP

Thirty-Hour Week A Draw-Back in Handling the Job

Borough council assembled in special session last night and adopted a resolution petitioning the Federal Government for more money and more men with which to complete the extension of water lines into Bristol Township.

The resolution was presented by Frank Pfeifer, chairman of the water supply committee, and read by secretary, William J. Lefferts. It was signed by the proper officers of the borough and will be forwarded to State Administrator Biddle today by Bucks County administrator, John S. Roberts, Jr. It granted between 400 and 500 additional men will be put to work.

In explaining the necessity for the resolution John S. Roberts, Jr., told council that the cost of the work was exceeding the estimates and that the time in which CWA projects had to be completed would not afford sufficient time in which to finish this project, under present working conditions.

Men on CWA projects work 30 hours a week and then the project stops. This is a handicap due to the fact that many days when the weather is favorable are days on which no work is done, because the workmen have already completed their 30-hour week.

Mr. Roberts also informed council that weather conditions have to an extent retarded the work here. "We would get a lot of trench opened and then have to leave it when the 30 hours had been completed and when the men returned to work, much of the work previously done had to be done over."

It was stated that most of the 16-inch pipe is laid as well as most of the 10 inch and 8 inch lines. "But we still have the four inch lines to place in the ground and these are the revenue producing lines. Unless this pipe is buried the borough and township investment won't amount to much."

The period of time in which to complete CWA projects ends February 15th, and we have no reason to anticipate that the time will be extended. I was in Harrisburg Tuesday and was informed that they have no official notice of any extension of time. We have placed about five miles of the 23 which are to be laid."

CAN THIS BE DONE?

Clothing for civilized woman is just about the same the world over. A traveler journeying rapidly from Hongkong to Budapest, thence to Paris, New York, San Francisco and Melbourne, would find no more change in feminine styles than those which had occurred during the period of his trip. In small towns and large, at home and abroad, fashions for women are uniform except in those isolated lands where a national garb has survived.

Some credit, or blame, for this state of affairs must go to the movies. Simultaneous and universal distribution of films gives every girl an equal chance to copy the beautiful clothes-horse heroine.

One exception to this rule must be allowed if the observations of an Indianapolis teacher hold true. She is authority for the statement that the feminine population of rural Indiana is holding out against utter uniformity of dress; that farm girls dress better, with more distinction, than city girls, and that they do it with less money.

Can it be that Indiana dairy maids have escaped the insidious influences of the films? Or are they more dependent on their own resources, more individualistic? And will city girls agree with this verdict of the Indianapolis teacher?

Anyway the comparison has whetted the public's curiosity. Does the superiority of farmer girls extend to other things? Do they also cook better, keep house better, manage husbands and children better?

UNIMPROVABLE

Snowy, granulated sugar did to molasses and brown sugar what the automobile did to the carriage and the radio to the phonograph. When "white sugar" was still an expensive imported product "long sweetening" and its variant, brown sugar, were in general usage in the United States.

Now doctors and scientists say we must go back to them for certain minerals essential to perfect health. They contain iron and other minerals necessary to the proper functioning of the human machine.

In this instance they have not prescribed a bitter pill or another spinach. Bread and molasses make a tasty combination, and molasses adds something to the flavor of baking. As for brown sugar, it is the maple sugar of those sections where the sugar maples do not grow to sweeten man's existence.

"Long sweetening" was a good sweetener. It contains food values only now being recognized. So did many other pioneer foods, which have been largely displaced by more civilized foodstuffs.

This is not the only instance in which the unerring instinct of the frontiersman chose from the things at hand the foodstuffs which best fulfilled his needs, and where all the scientific knowledge and inventive genius of modernity have not improved upon the savage diet.

Modern love story: He wrapped his arms around her, then the car wrapped itself around a tree.

Friendships formed in the wilderness may be deep and abiding but pals still shoot at each other in mistake for all manner of beasts.

Many unsanitary old-timers lived long, which teaches us that germs of that era were weaklings or else just gave up in disgust.

CHAPTER FIFTY-ONE

A dozen people heard him say it. Clark and Patricia were among that dozen. The girl was appalled. She sensed that Clark was disgusted and displeased. But it was too late now. Blair's face turned red. He looked hard at Haverholt.

"I didn't expect to see you here," he said. "The same old Julian, too. You haven't changed a particle. How are you this evening? How is the bridge sharper this evening?"

"Very well," returned Julian smoothly. "I'm sorry my presence upsets you, Reuben. I find yours distinctly disappointing."

"Your manners are atrocious."

"They're better than your bridge."

Blair was angry. He was more than angry. He was furious. Julian had the advantage. There was unmistakably an audience now. Julian glared in the eagerly watching eyes, the eagerly listening ears.

"I, sir," sputtered Blair, clutching for a withering retort, "I play bridge like a gentleman."

"So I hear," assented Julian softly. "I hear that gentlemen can't play bridge. Though," he admitted courteously, "though I may be mistaken. Perhaps your European trip improved your special brand."

Blair's dignity and caution were lost in rage. These were his people. This upstart was making him ridiculous.

"My bridge needs no improvement, sir. I was a master at the game before you were ever heard of."

Julian sadly shook his head. "You've lost your grip these later days. So far as I know you haven't figured in tournament bridge since the Indian Wars."

"I could beat you tomorrow," snapped Blair, flinging prudence to the winds. "You're nothing but a bag of wind."

"Now, now Reuben," said Julian in a fatherly fashion. "Now, now." "I could beat you tomorrow, sir."

Suddenly Julian's eyes were sharp and bright as knives.

"What about my challenge then? What about my challenge, Reuben? Do you mean to say that you're accepting it at last?"

Reuben Blair was trapped and knew it. There could be no withdrawal now. If he declined the challenge now by tomorrow he would be the laughing stock of his little world. In other moods Patricia might have found Blair's harried air amusing, might have found amusing the fact that Haverholt had goaded his pompous little enemy on to the decision he had so long evaded.

"Let's get out of this," Clark suggested now. "Or," he added quickly, "do you want to join Julian?"

"No," she murmured, "no."

A crowd was gathering. Word of the encounter between Blair and Haverholt had flown about. The knot about the two ancient enemies was increasing. There was excitement in the air. The battle of ballyhoo was taking form, the bridge battle of the century, the bridge sharpeners versus the ladies and gentlemen.

Patricia's head ached, ached. Nothing mattered now. She wanted only to escape this foolish, chattering crowd. She excused herself to Clark and crept into the dressing room. Marthe found her there minutes later, Marthe, jubilant, excited, delighted that her hall had been the scene of a sensation.

"The bridge marathon is all arranged," she explained her coming here. "The newspaper men want your photograph. They want to photograph the three of you together, you, Julian, and Reuben Blair."

Patricia felt an old fear stir at her heart.

"Newspaper men," she said not

"The bridge marathon is all arranged," Marthe explained. "The newspaper men want your photograph."

quite steadily. "They couldn't have arrived already."

"They were here for the ball," Marthe supplied shortly. "They have set up their cameras in the ballroom. They're waiting." She regarded the younger girl with narrowed eyes. "Or don't you want to come?" What she meant was, "Don't you dare?"

Patricia dared. What had she now to lose? She stood in the center of the ballroom beside Julian and the unhappy, wretched Blair while the flashlights boomed and the acrid smell of powder filled the air. The battle of ballyhoo had begun. The bridge marathon was under way. It would, thought Patricia, as she smiled into the cameras, it would destroy her before it ended. Just now she could not care.

The morning papers went for the battle of the bridge experts in a great big way. Julian had picked a perfect spot to fling down and force his challenge. The March Ball. That helped the story. The public interest in the game of contract helped. But, the thing that made the coming battle a perfect piece of news was Julian and Julian's personality and Julian's audacious and amazing impudence.

"Julian Haverholt, self-styled bridge sharper, winner of the Eastern Championship for the past three years, offers to bet ten thousand dollars against ten cents, that he and his niece will defeat Reuben Blair, elder statesman of the game."

Blair had angrily declined the bet. That only increased the humor of Julian's terms. The city rocked with laughter. The public loves a scrap. Subway straphangers were discussing Haverholt and Blair, housewives in New Jersey, bankers down in Wall Street, knew all about the marathon. The terms of the coming match were scattered broadcast; not a newspaper but printed them.

Blair and Haverholt had agreed to play two hundred rubbers of bridge, never less than five an evening, out the element of luck.

"The 'I' be riving bridge till Christmas," one stenographer said to another.

"I guess those fellows like it. My boy friend says . . ."

Half of the match was to be staged at a hotel of Julian's choice, the other half was to be staged at the Carlton Chambers, the ultra-conservative, smart hotel where Reuben Blair had lived for years.

"I'm not sure about this special type of publicity," murmured the manager of the Carlton Chambers to the owner.

"You're crazy, Tom! The match is going to make newspaper history, mark my words; Gosh, what a break for us."

Haverholt and Blair finally settled on a wager, which the latter reluctantly accepted as fitting to his dignity. Julian bet twenty thousand dollars to five thousand that he would triumph, the winnings in either case to go to charity.

"I hope they don't ask me to take such money," sniffed Miss Eloise Petty, who ran a home for decrepit horses. "I'd like a chance to try it down. It's tainted money, won by gambling, whatever fancy name they call it by. It's a disgrace that decent newspapers would print such stuff—I'm going to stop my subscriptions instantly."

Julian Haverholt promised to stick to his system of bidding, a system that, in his modest estimation, was preeminent, unique in its field for accuracy and precision. His little red book was for sale in any book store. Oddly, Blair used identical terms in describing the system which he had invented and would employ. His little green book was similarly for sale.

"I always use the Haverholt system myself," a society woman declared to her friends.

"When you remember it, don't you mean that, Janis? Now, just the other day, do you recall that heart hand . . ."

Haverholt and Blair were in complete accord on one point. The battle of the experts would automatically decide who was the greatest bridge player in the world. In their minds, and in the public mind, the affair had the definite quality of a prize fight championship. Other lesser experts, reading the papers over breakfast coffee, hardly fancied that interpretation. There were mutterings of dissent in many bridge clubs, vain mutterings. It was too late. The ball had started rolling. The battle of ballyhoo was in its stride.

In Memoriam

ATA—In loving memory of our dear son, Frank, who died suddenly January 12, 1932.

It was on a Tuesday evening—
We will never forget that day;
An Angel came and whispered:
"I must take your dear son away."
He bid no one a last farewell,
He said good-bye to none;
His loving heart had ceased to beat,
Before we knew he was gone.
Sadly missed by his

KNIGHTS OF COLUMBUS WIN OVER ODD FELLOWS

The scoring power of Lou Parker and "Gunner" Corrigan combined last night as the Knights of Columbus were extended to beat out their neighborly rivals, the Odd Fellows, in the second match of the evening. Final count was 46-42.

Parker amassed 17 points and Corrigan 16 in the Knights' triumph and those points were surely needed as the Oddies after being weak in the first half race presented Paine and Rundle to the local fans and these players kept the Black and White jerseyed team in the run throughout.

Several times during the fray the Odd Fellows took the lead from the Caseys and held it for brief moments but the shooting of Parker and Corrigan was not to go unrewarded. Parker made the last two deciding field goals. Corrigan's sharp-eye counting kept the Knights in the fray the first half when he counted 12 points.

Al Rundle, coach of the Burlington High School, was the leader in the offensive attack of the Odd Fellows' quintet. Rundle netted five double-deckers and a sextet of free shots for 16 points. Twelve of the tallies were marked up in the second half and enabled the Black and White team to remain in the battle.

Freddie Hibbs annexed three field goals for the losing club and these came at moments when the improved team of the Oddies seemed to be on edge for the contest. The first half of the tilt was fast with the Hopkins Lodge team outpacing the ultimate winners. The second half was decided mostly by Lou Parker.

The scoring of the 17 points by the Knights of Columbus forward put that player in the lead for points earned during the season as Riemer, leading scorer of the league during the first half, was held to two field goals and a foul by Fallon. Riemer now has 82 points while Parker has a total of 87 points.

HIBERNIANS OVERCOME LEAD; DEFEAT HAWKS

(By T. M. Juno)

Staging one of the strongest second half rallies on the local court this season, the Hibernians overcame the large lead amassed by the Hawks in the first half to chalk up their eighth straight win of the campaign. Final score was 43-38.

The first half battle was all to the Hawks. The Jenksmen clearly outplayed the first half champions and built up a large lead, principally through the shooting of the two guards, Johnny Cole and Harry Kendrick. The Hawks were first to score on a foul and then the Hibboes deadlocked it. The Birds then counted eight points before the Big Green counted again. The first quarter ended with the score 13-9.

Thirteen points by Cole and seven by Harry Kendrick moulded a 24-13 lead at the first half gun as the teams went to their dressing room for rest. At the opening of the second part of the fray, Dorsey replaced Dugan.

The tide of the tilt changed here and the Big Green began to count point after point while the scoring ace of the Birds, Cole, was being blanked. The third quarter saw only one point between the teams, the score being 29-28 with the Hawks in the front.

"Joie" Sascavitz and "Johnny" Dougherty came to the Dolanmen's rescue in the last ten minutes of playing. Field goals by these two players gave the Hibbs a 32-29 lead. Lawrence then opened up and made a foul. But Dougherty and Joe Roe scored fouls while Sascavitz added another double-decker. Lawrence hit the cords for two more field goals but John Dougherty added a field and a foul while Sascavitz accounted for another twin-pointer before Doc Potts fired the gun ending the fast fray.

Sascavitz and Joe Roe were high scorers for the winners, while the losers were led by Cole, Kendrick and Lawrence.
